Background

The California Energy Commission formed the California Natural Gas Stakeholders Working Group during the 2001 energy crisis. Some of the working group participants include: California Air Resources Board; California Public Utilities Commission; Energy Commission; Department of General Services; Division of Oil, Gas and Geothermal Resources; Sempra Energy; Southern California Edison; Pacific Gas & Electric; Southern California Gas; State Lands Commission; and others. The Energy Commission chairs this group, which is involved in all aspects of natural gas systems in California. The working group participants will provide briefings on a variety of topics currently affecting California. Additionally, the agencies will be interested in gathering information on concerns and suggestions from the members of the public.
